

a
process
book

katerie
boursiquot

table of contents

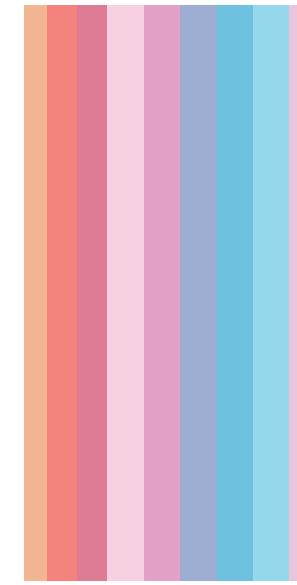

posters

page 8

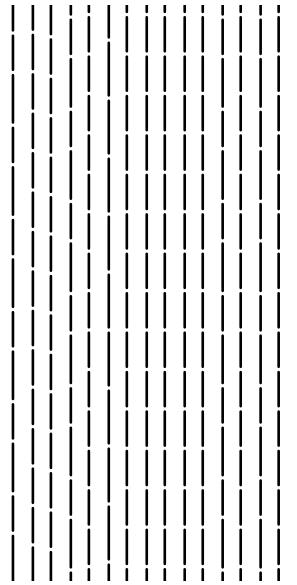

postcards

page 18

translation

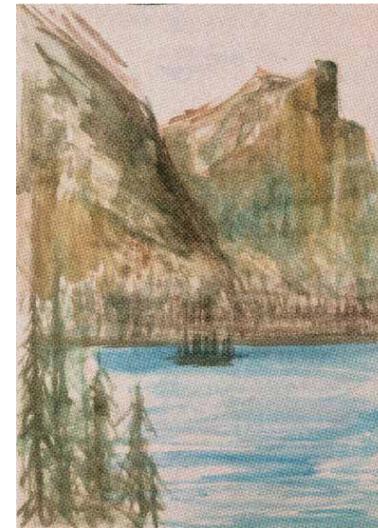

page 32

national park posters

selecting the parks

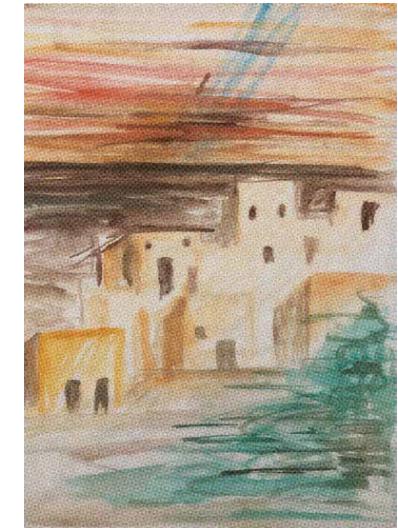

when picking the parks i wanted to work on, i looked for a unifying theme. i hadn't ever been to a national park so I wanted to pick an important theme that i wouldn't become uninterested with. so the theme i went with highlights the native american presence in national parks. showing that these marvels of nature were not always these untouched landscapes, but homes to large native american tribes. to encourage people to recognize this information and be mindful and respectful to the original "owners" of the land.

glacier national park

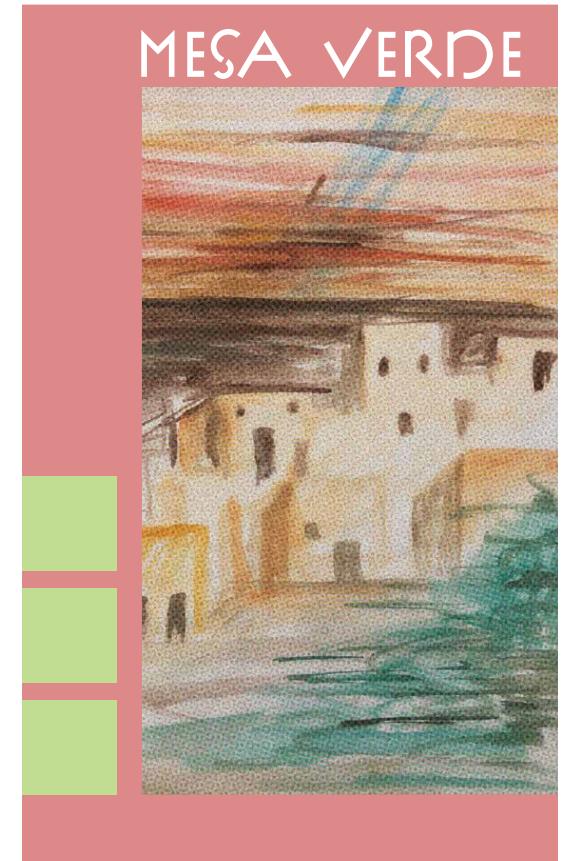

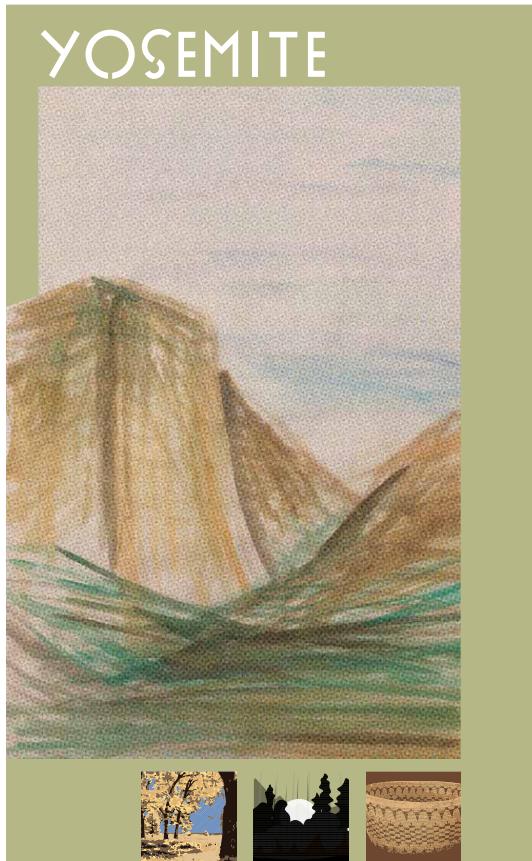

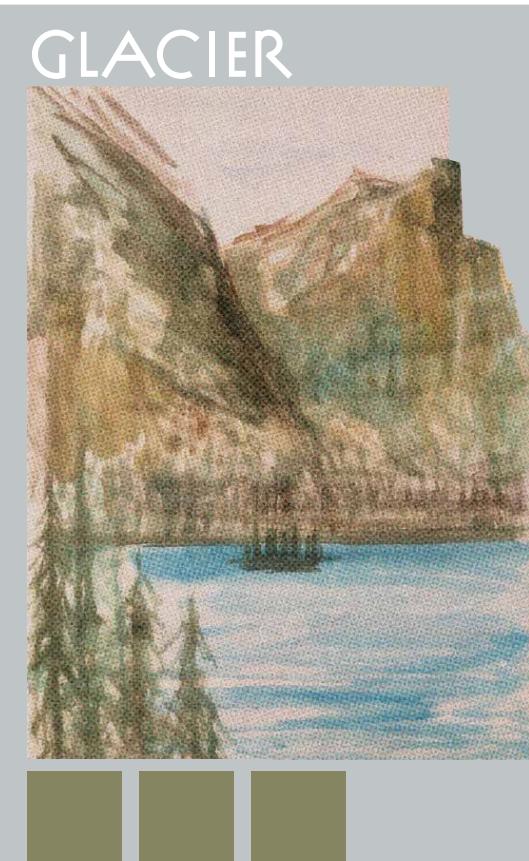

yosemite national park

mesa verde national park

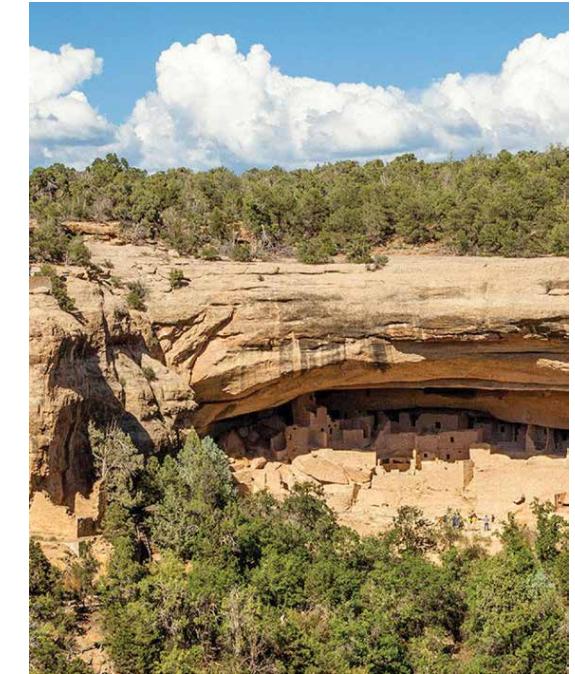

version 1

i knew i wanted an old, grainy feel for the graphic. this iteration focuses on finding that style and playing with icon placement.

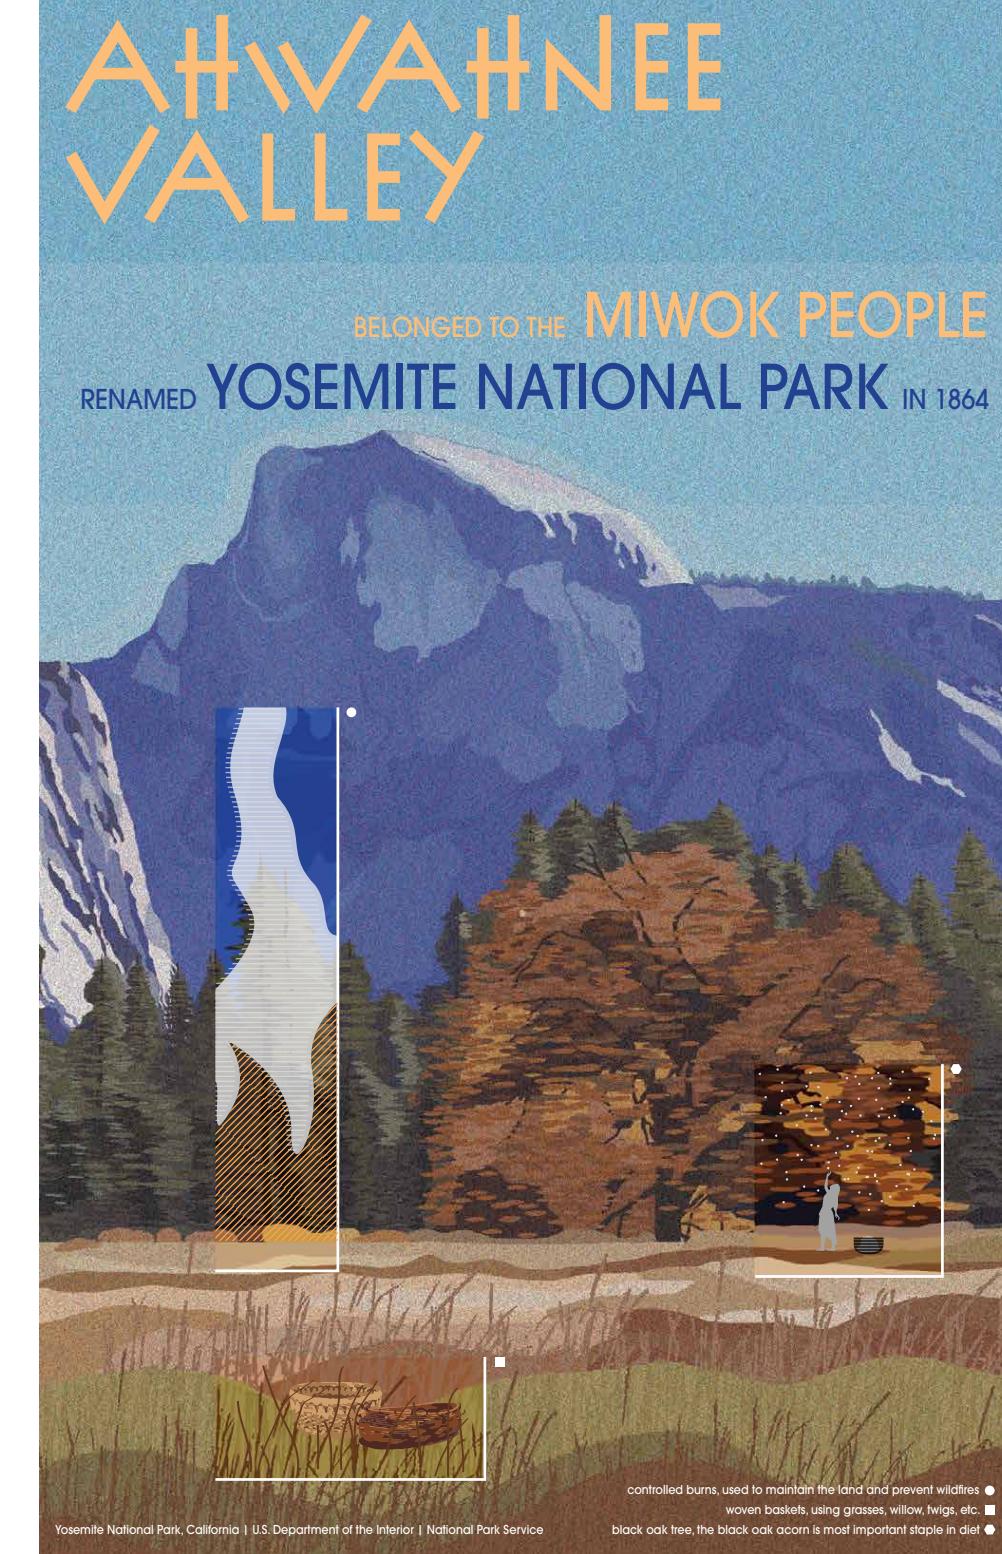

new style

instead of painting it by hand, i brought the following images into photoshop and used the paintbrush tool to get the shapes and look i wanted

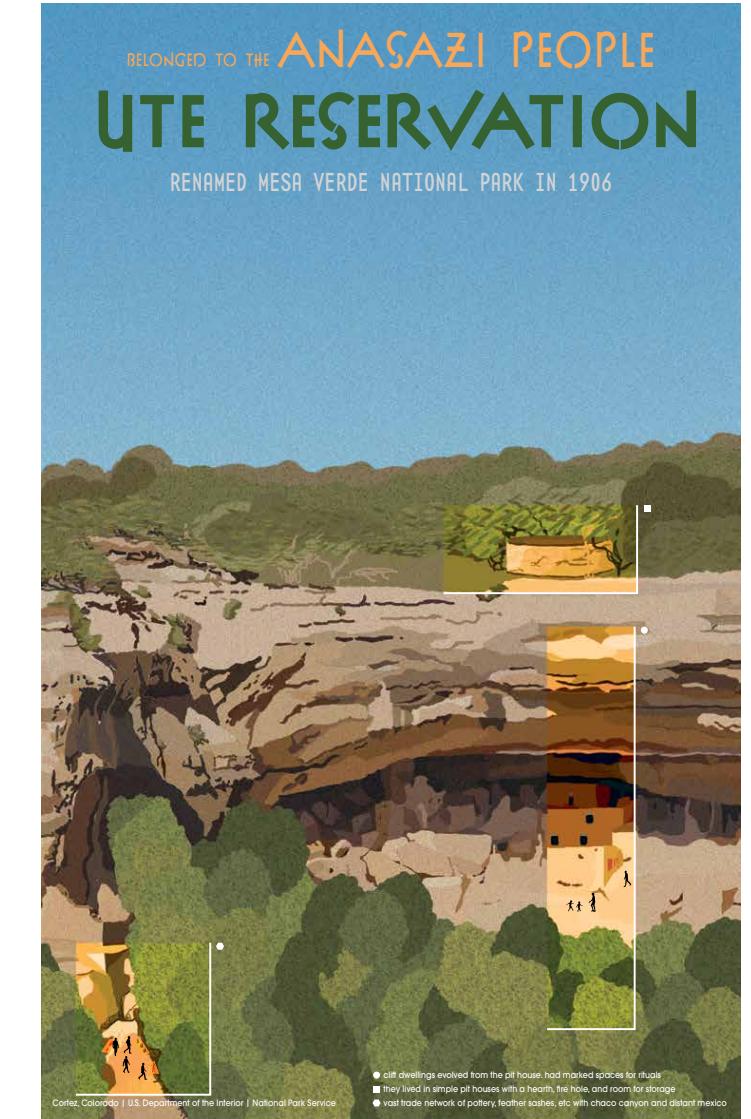

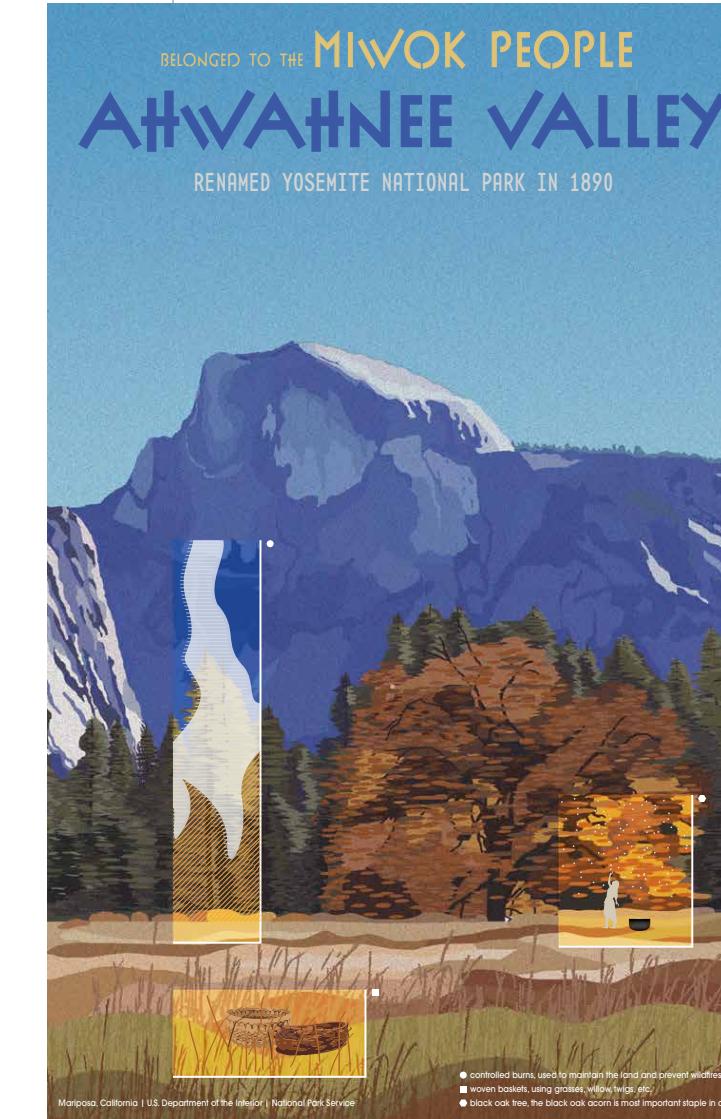

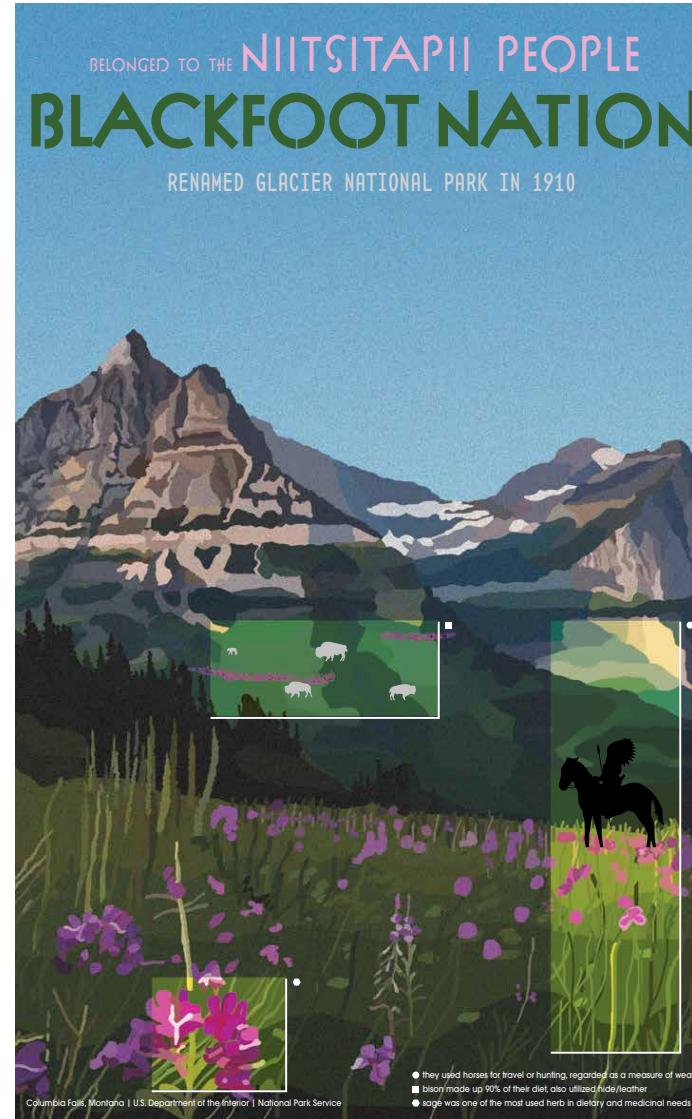

version 2

rather than the watercolor style, i used a photo to base a photoshop painting on this version focuses on integrating the icons into the image rather than having them stuck onto the frame like the previous iteration.

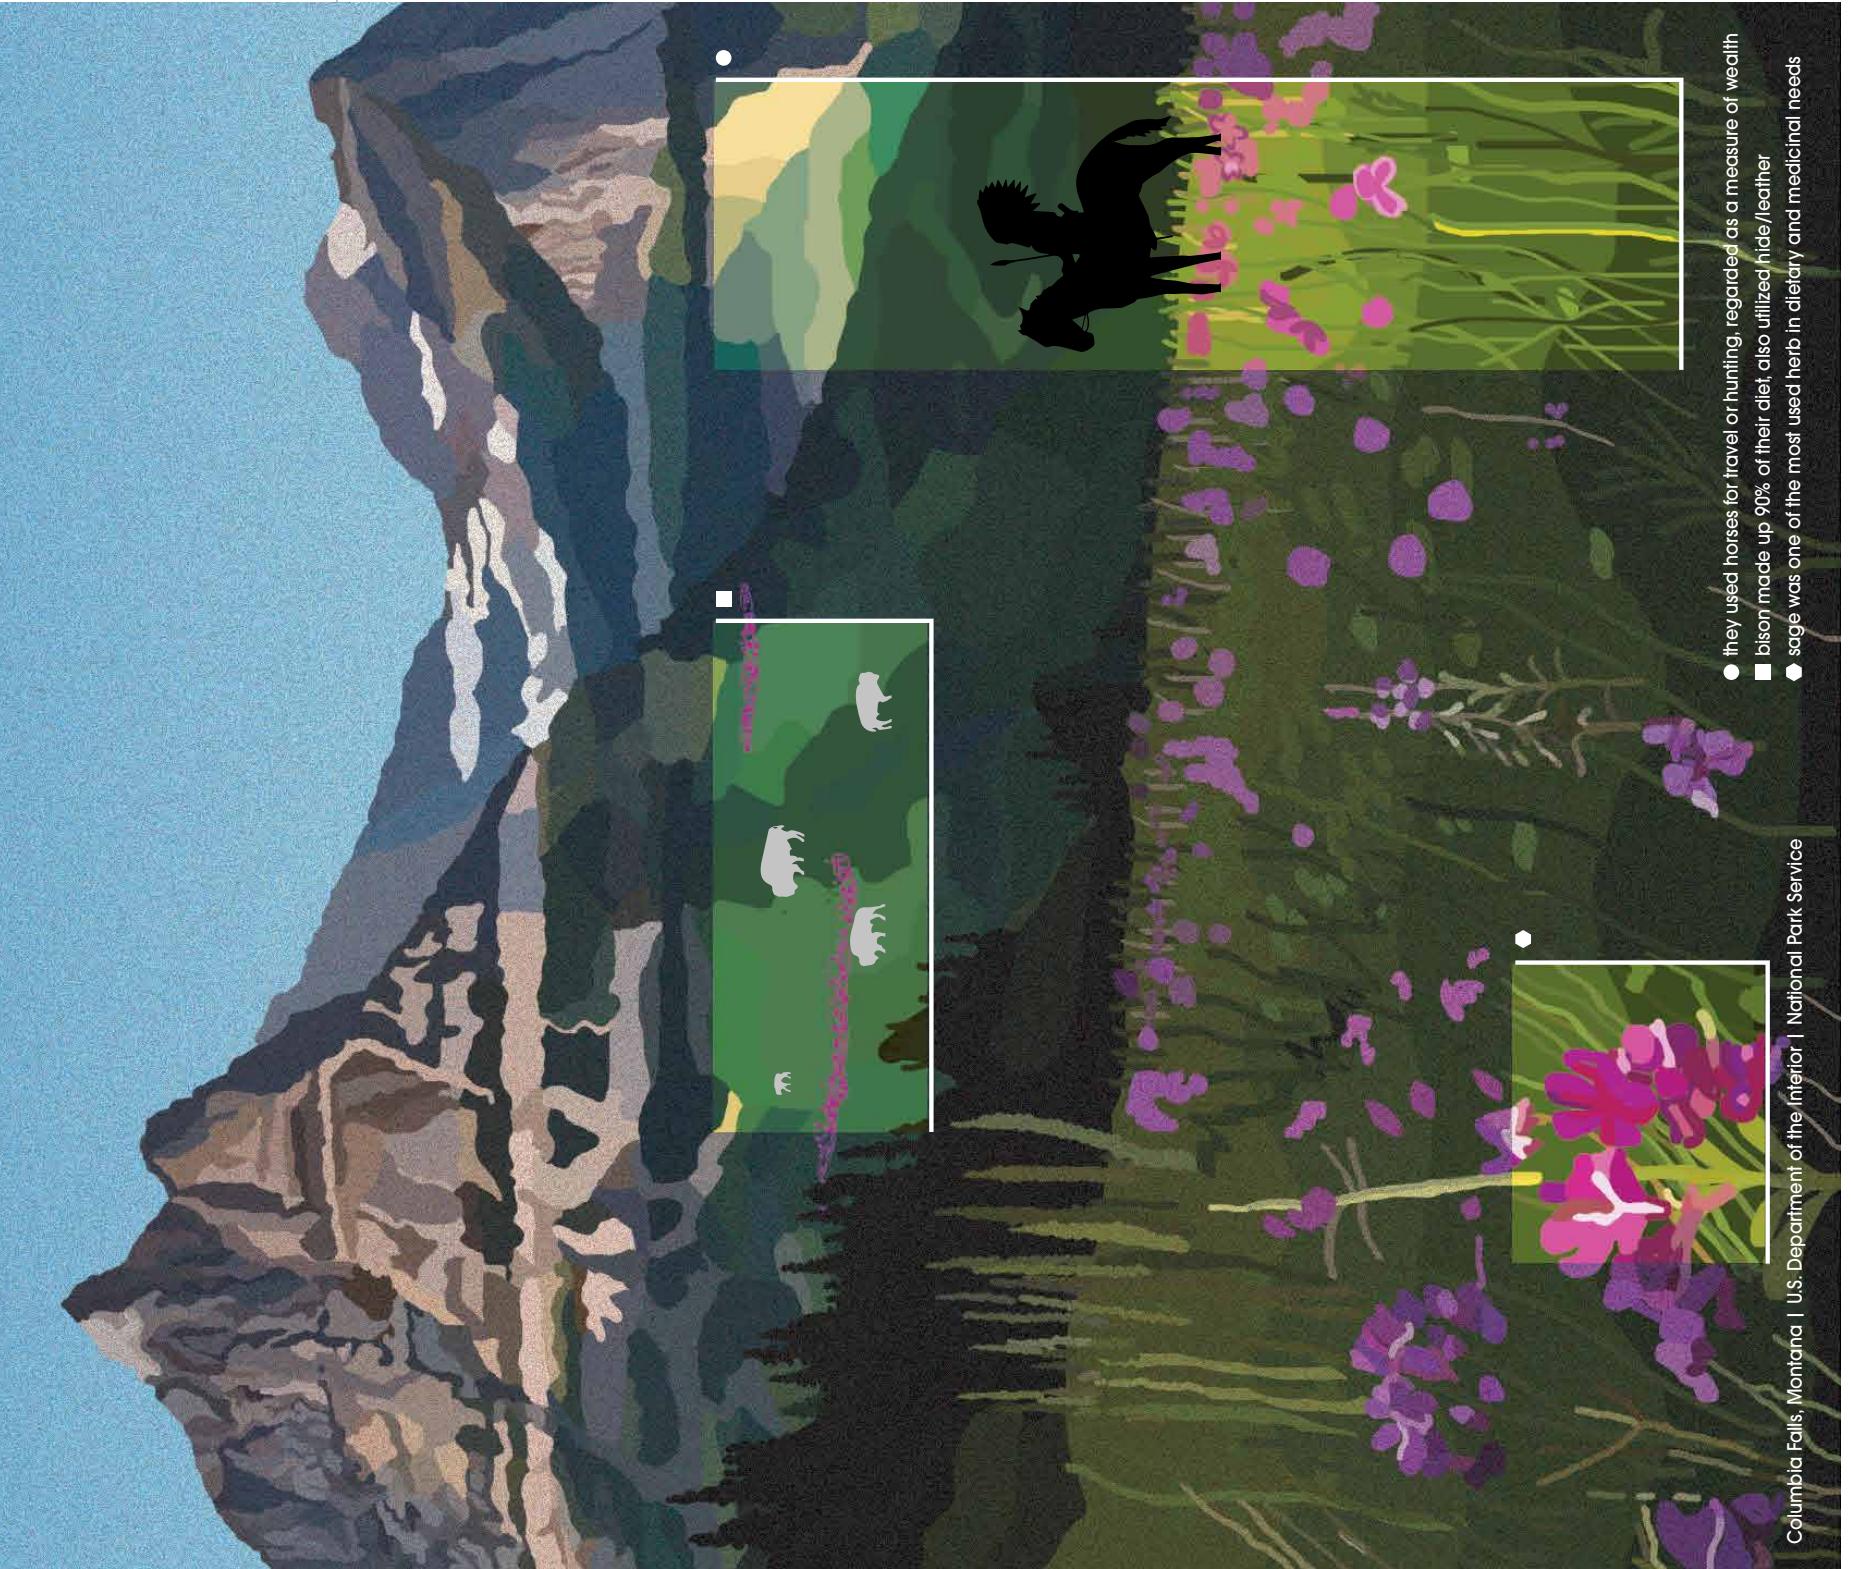

version 3

as a set
the final version has a common sky and type treatment to create a unified look. each poster has a set of icons in similar shapes to further enforce the set. the icons, act as windows into the once-reality of the national parks.

BELONGED TO THE NIITSITAPII PEOPLE BLACKFOOT NATION

RENAMED GLACIER NATIONAL PARK IN 1910

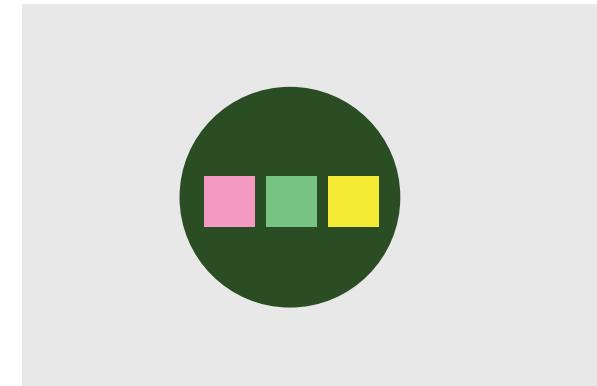

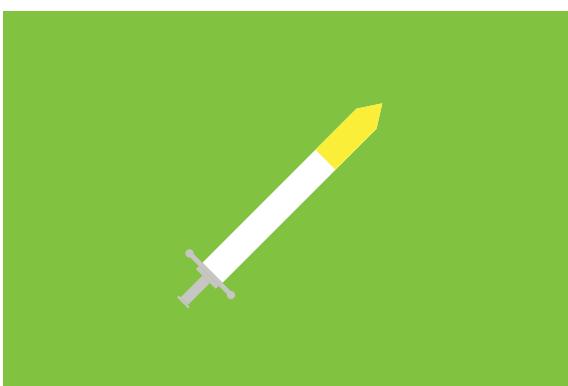

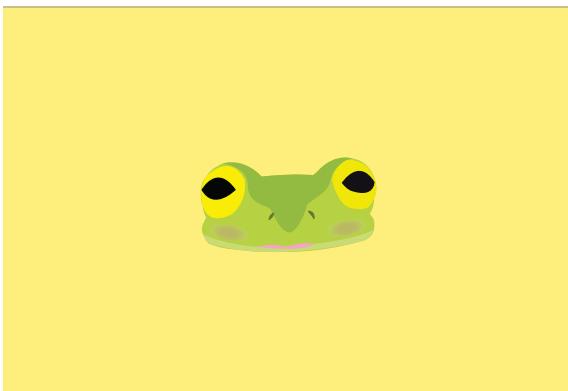

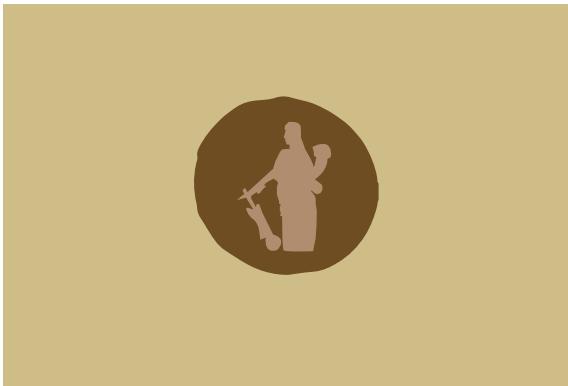

Columbia Falls, Montana | U.S. Department of the Interior | National Park Service

- they used horses for travel or hunting, regarded as a measure of wealth
- bison made up 90% of their diet, also utilized hide/leather
- sage was one of the most used herb in dietary and medicinal needs

post card book

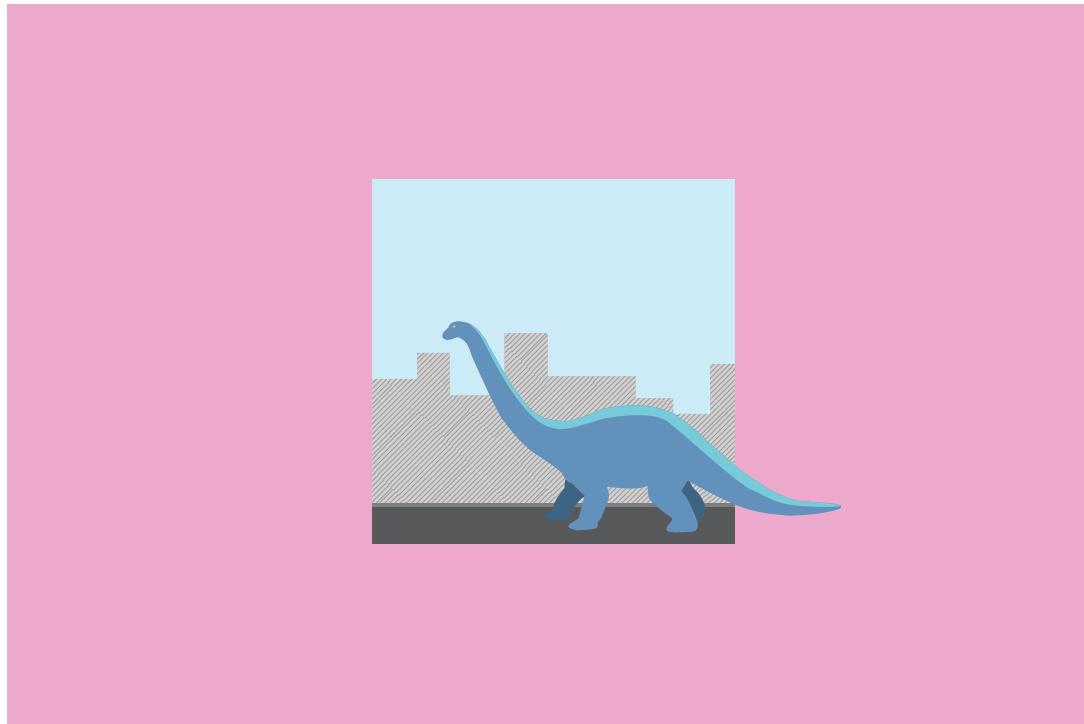

first attempt

the first project we started working on was the word-a-day post-card designs. my intention in the first week was to take inspiration from the miniature art movement. i focused on small illustrations that related, either literally or slightly obscurely, to the definition of the word. although it was the beginning of my idea, it needed some work in terms of color, unifying themes, and interpretation of definition.

second attempt

front //
each postcard has
an allocated 2x2
in. "canvas" or
"window" into an
illustration. when
needed i can break
out of the frame to
emphasize size or
definition of word.

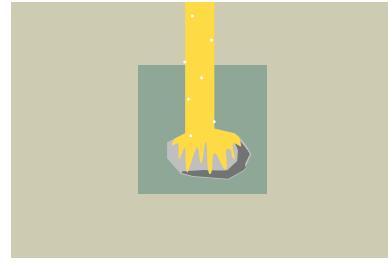

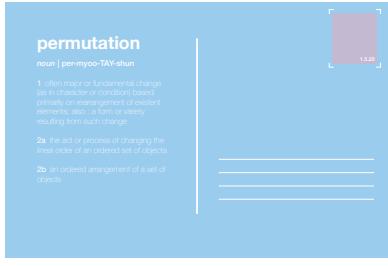

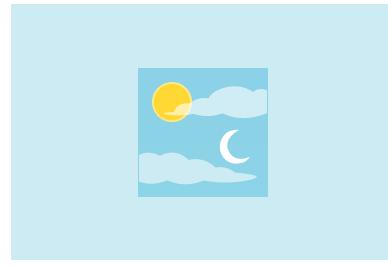

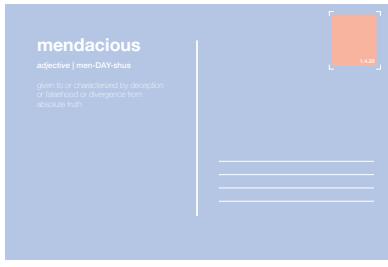

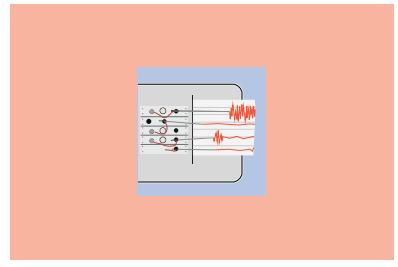

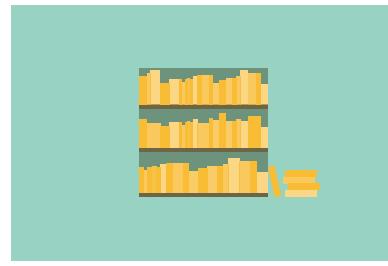

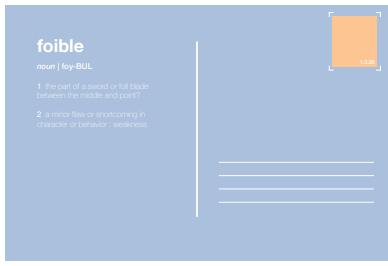

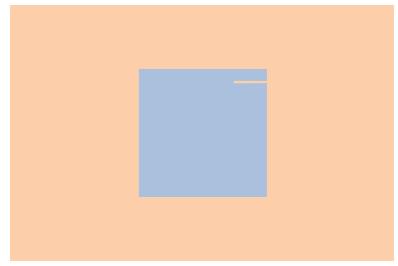

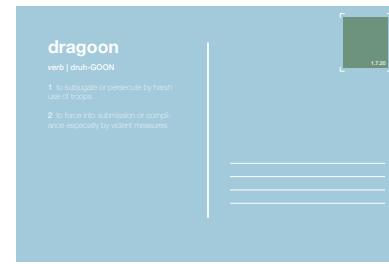

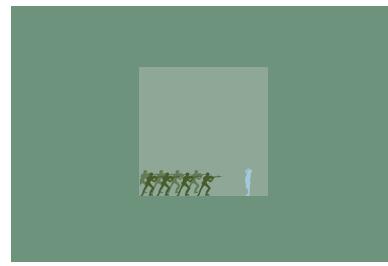

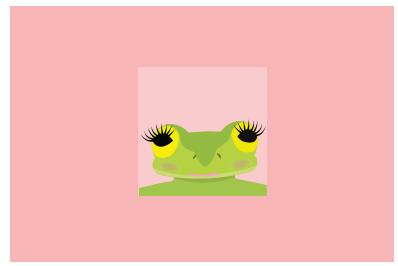

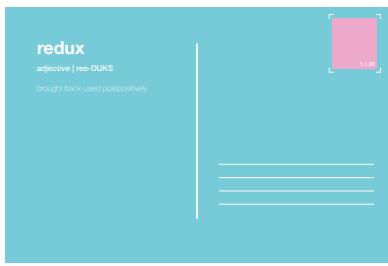

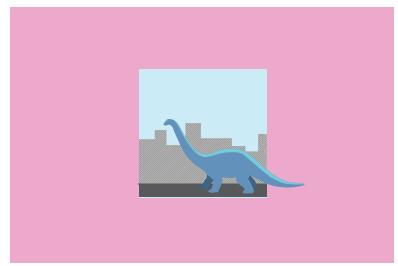

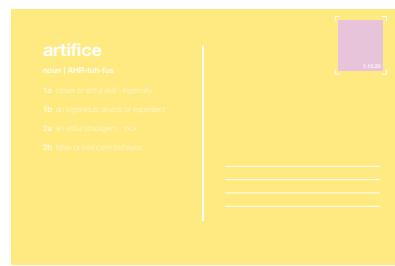

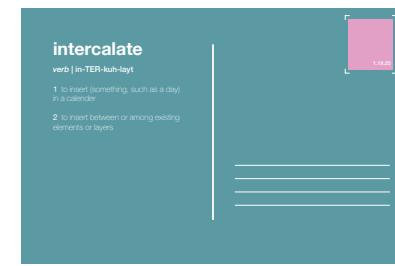

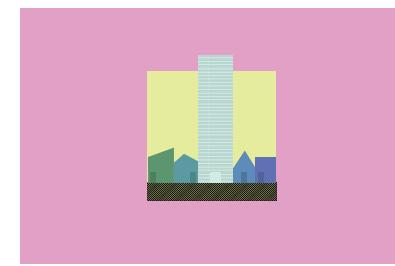

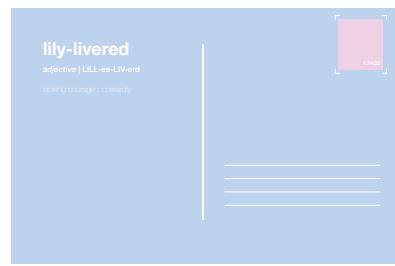

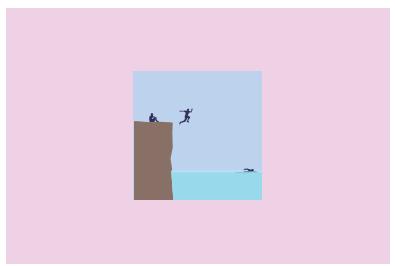

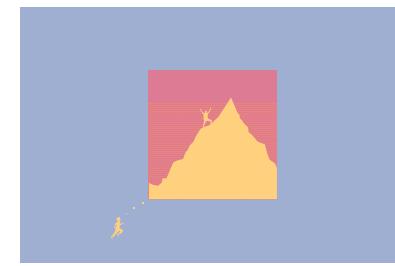

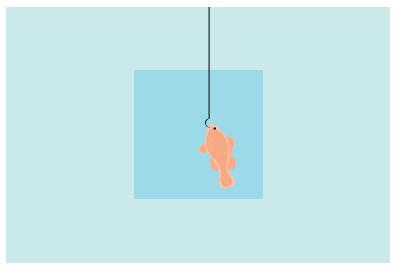

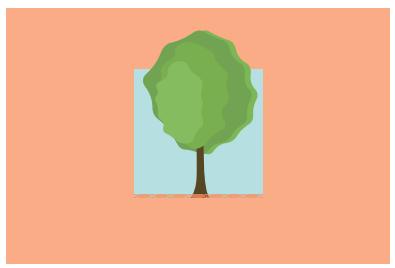

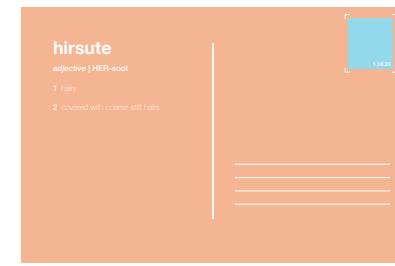

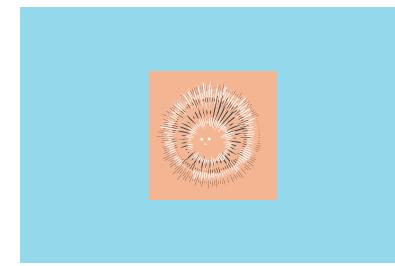

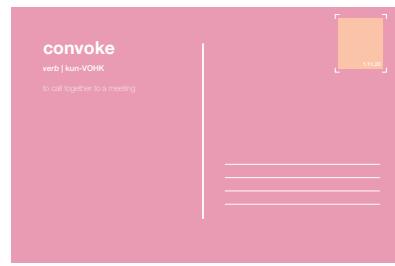

back //
each postcard has
the word, pronunciation, and
definition. place
for postage and
address can also be found.

redux

adjective | ree-DUKS
brought back-used postpositively

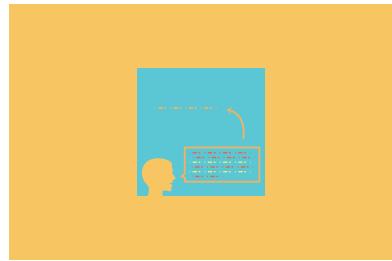

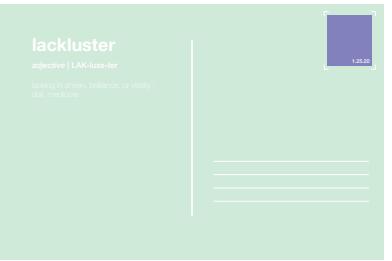

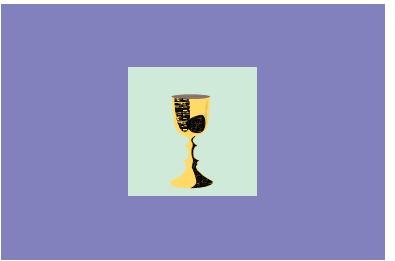

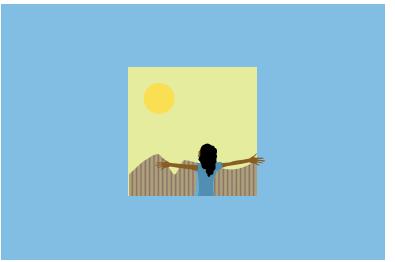

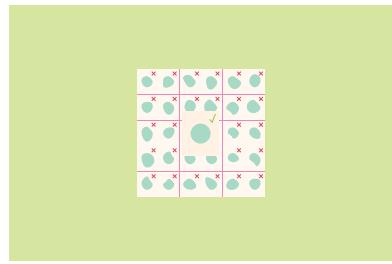

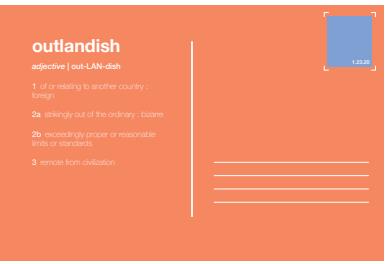

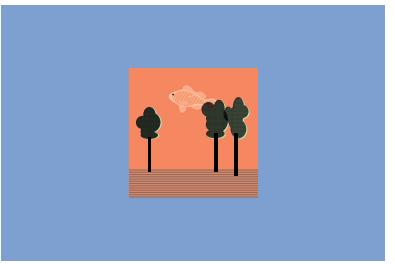

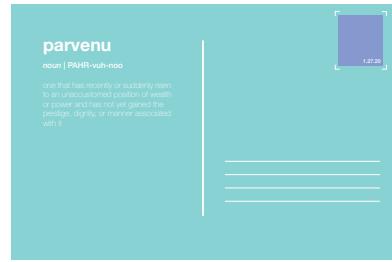

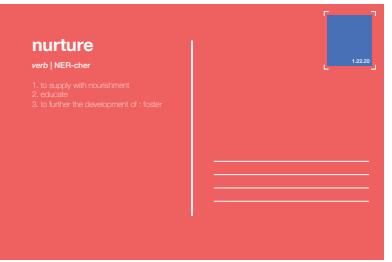

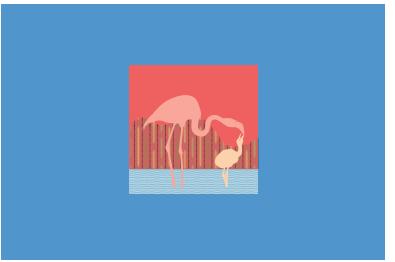

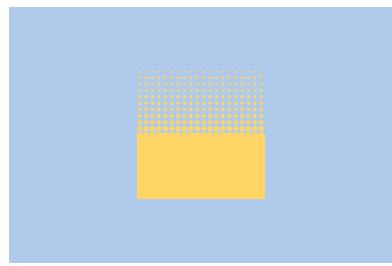

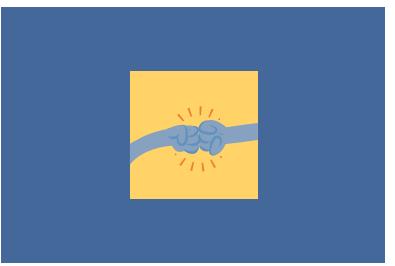

1.1.20

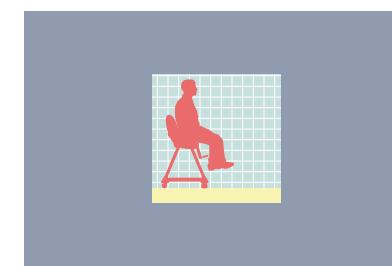

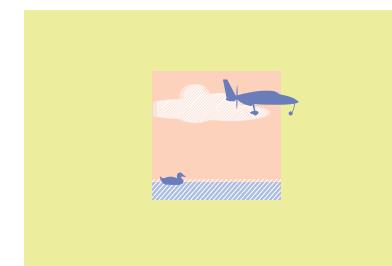

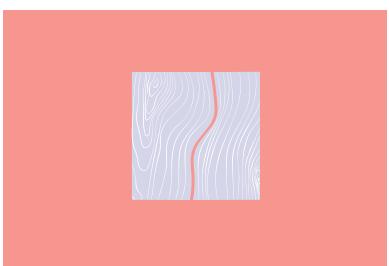

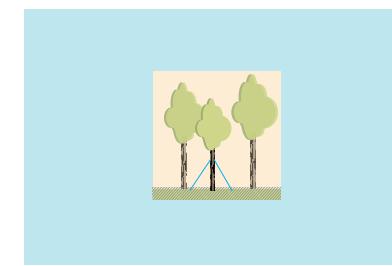

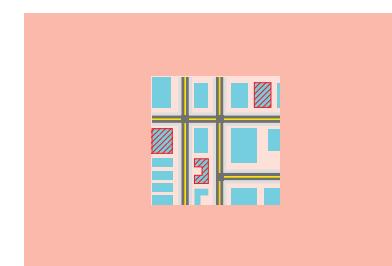

week 3

week 4

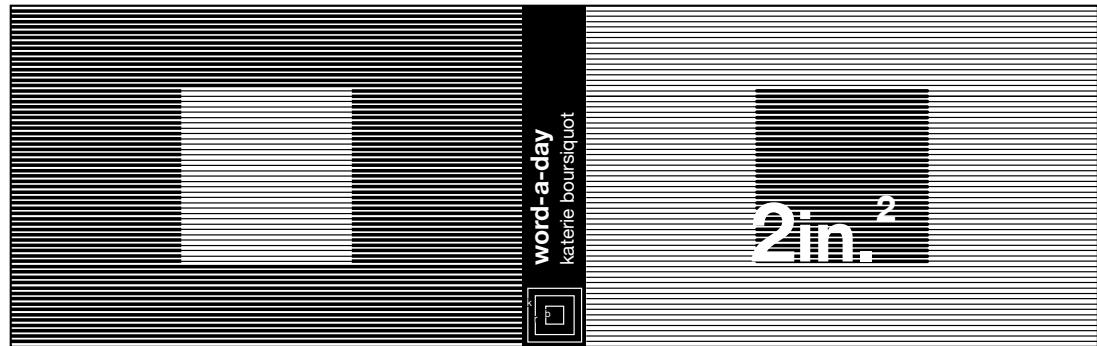

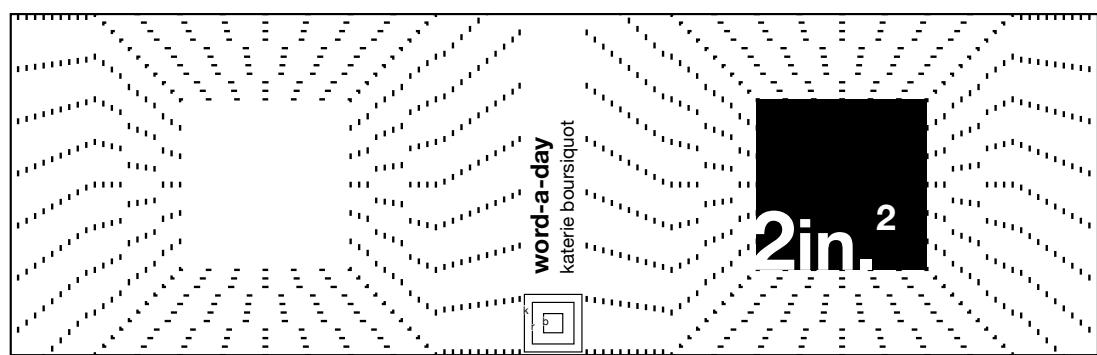

week 7

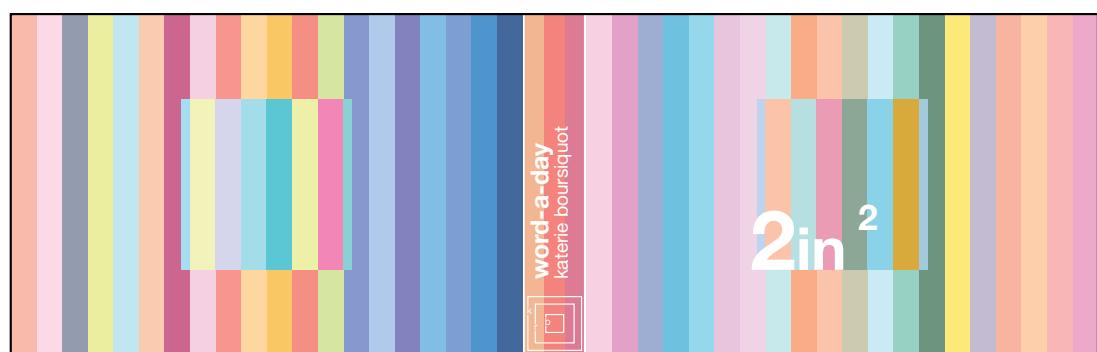

cover options

option 1 //
all options use
the same framing
system apparent
in the book. this
one uses horizontal
lines of different
thicknesses.

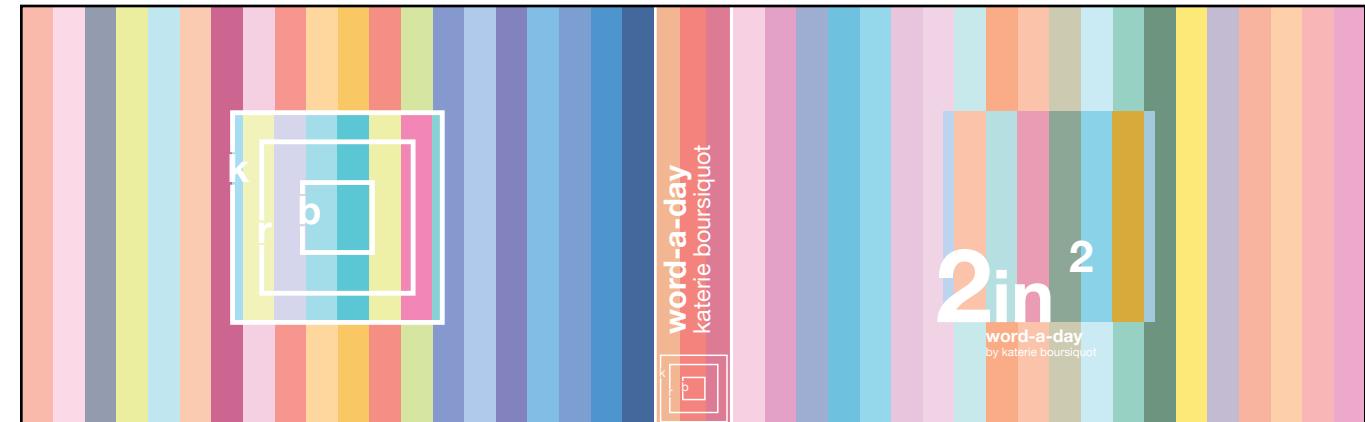

option 2 //
this option uses
alternating dashed
lines as a pattern.

option 3 //
this option uses the
same colors found
in the book to give
a preview of the
illustrations inside.

cover options

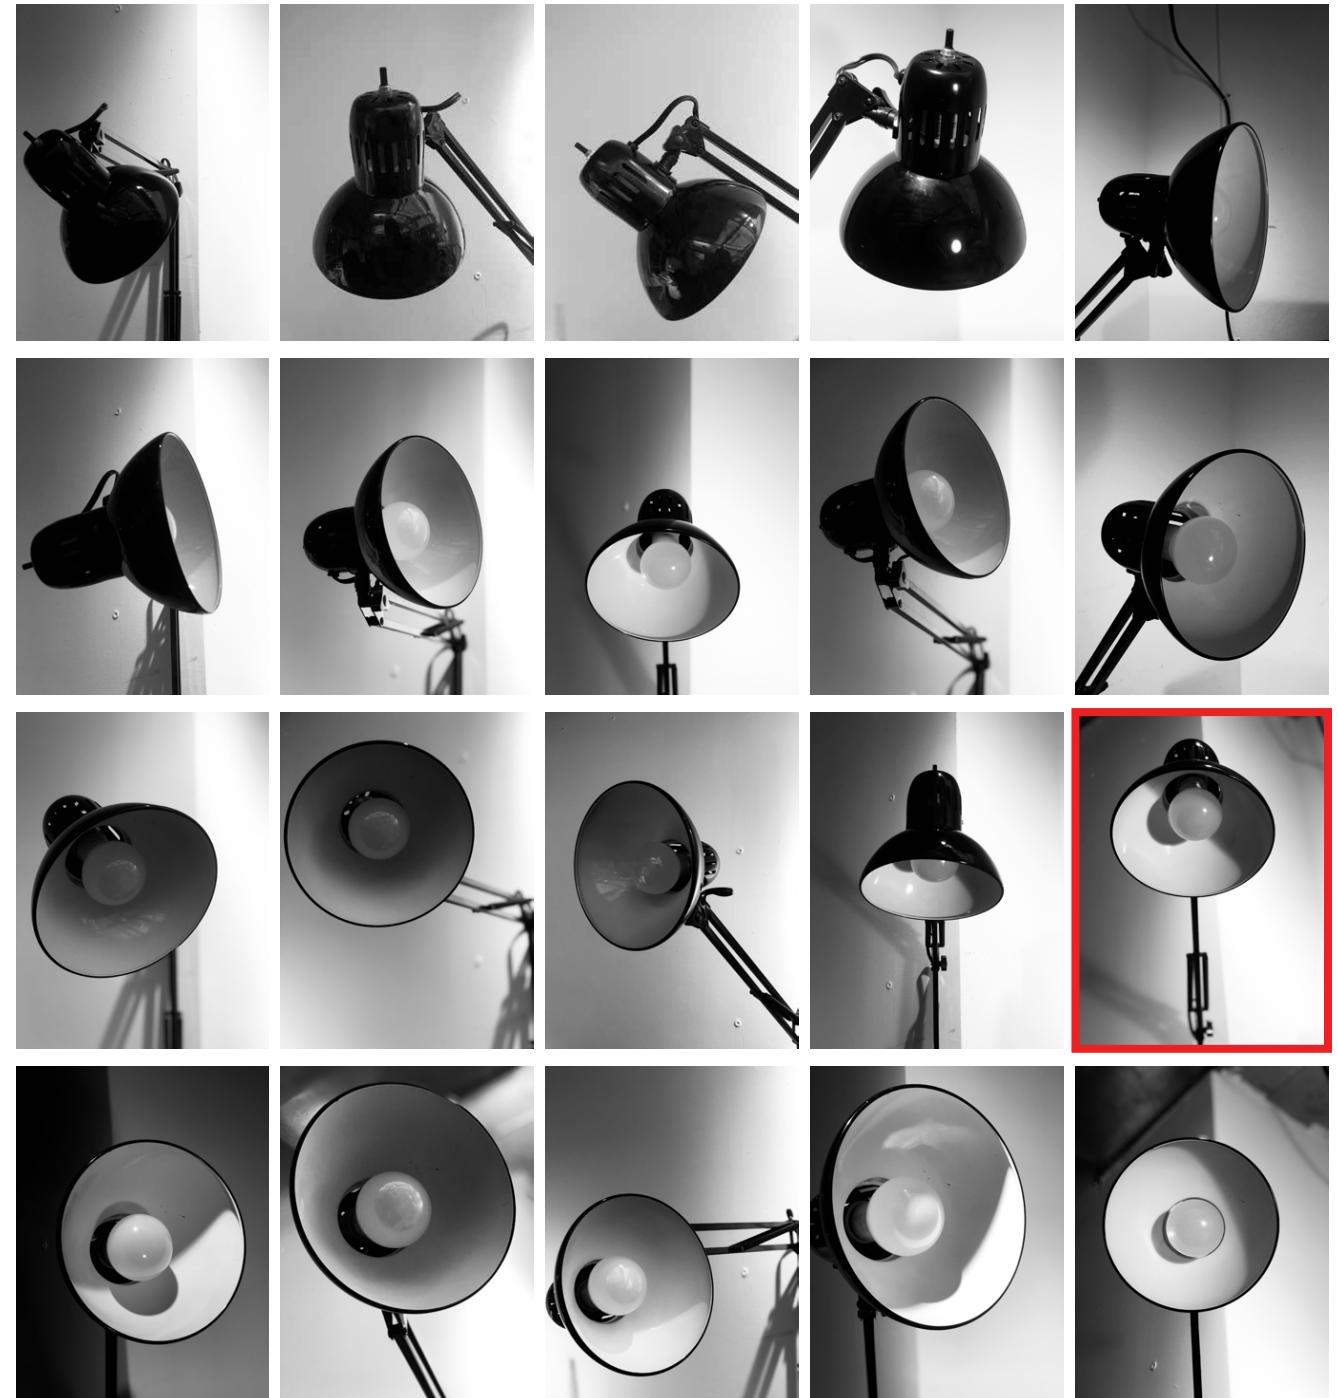

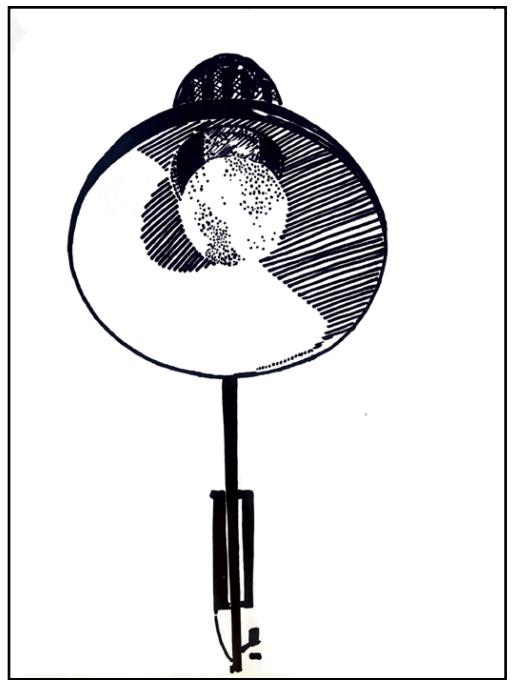

this cover was chosen because it best showcased the elements of the book while not giving too much away. having the colors flip for the 2 in. frame allows for simple demarkation of space.

object trans lation + ad

image selection

the object i selected was a lamp. i took 20 images of the object at different angles to explore the shadows created by itself. i selected the image outlined in red because it's orientation had good tension in the frame and the contrast within the lamp was interesting.

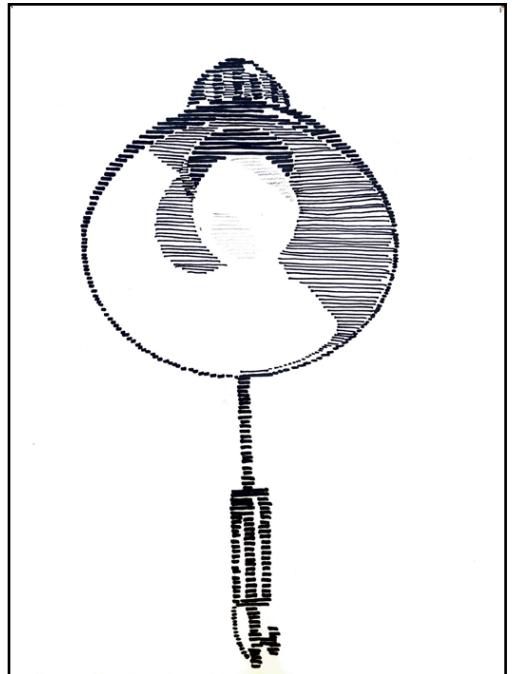

sharpie

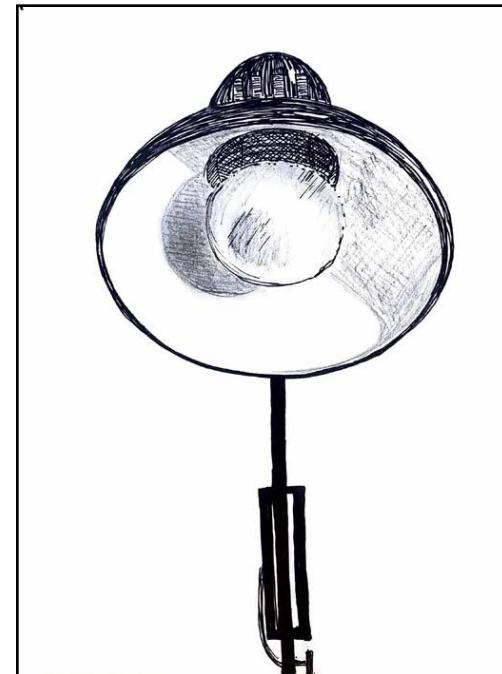

graphite

sketch translation

sharpie + graphite

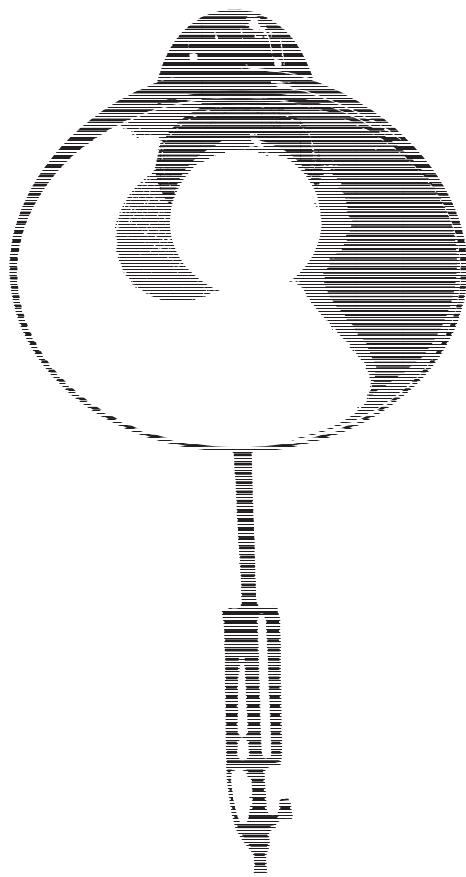

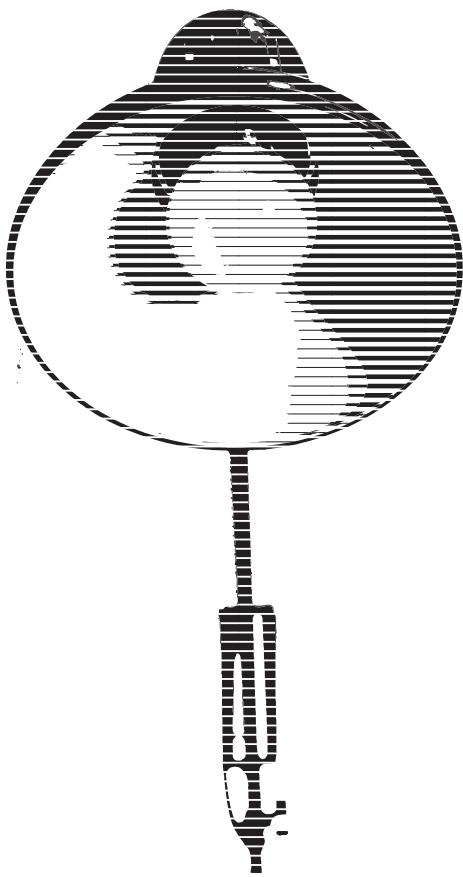

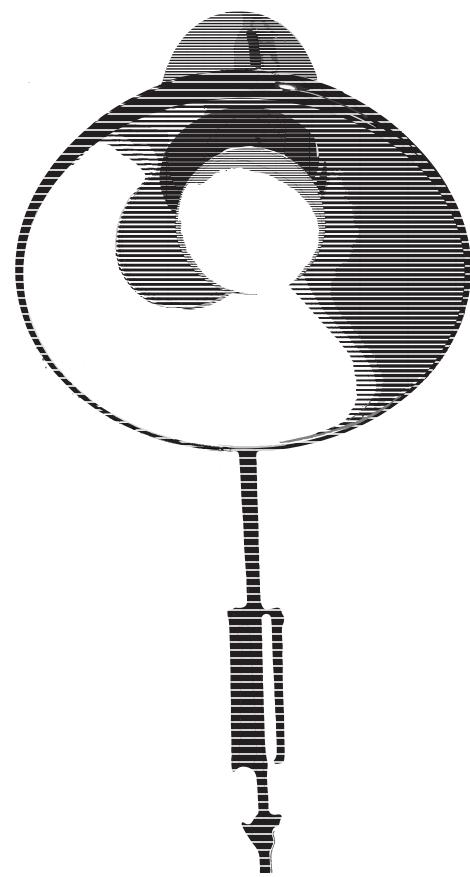

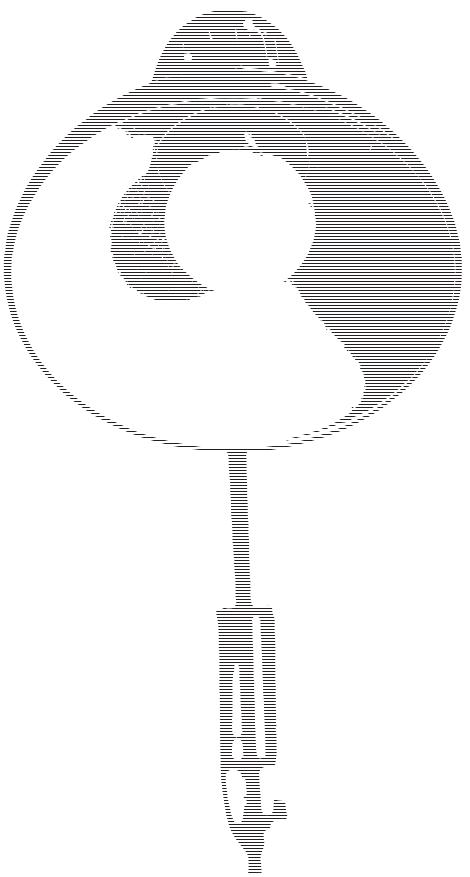

sharpie + graphite

sharpie + graphite

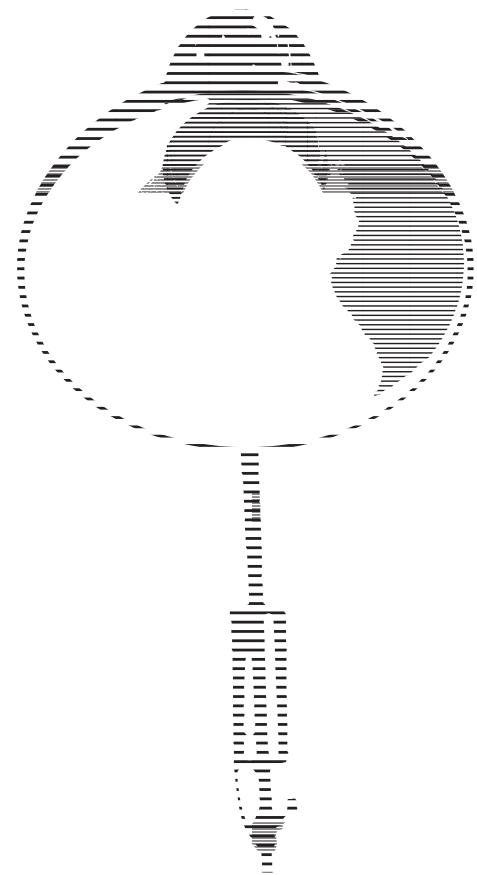

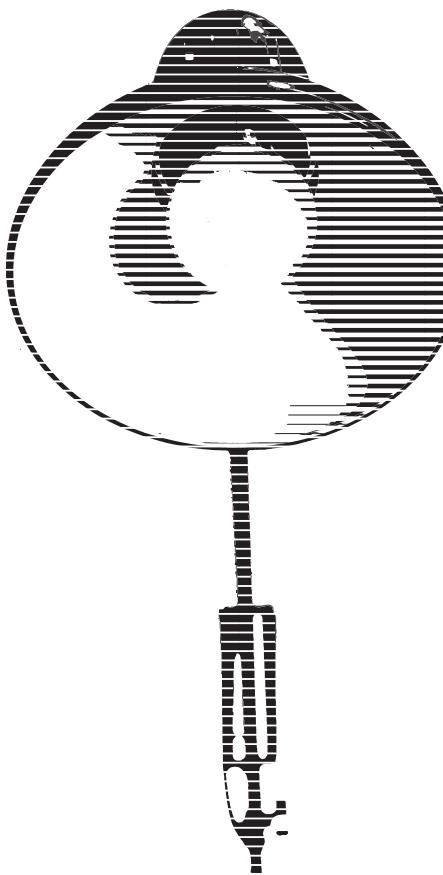

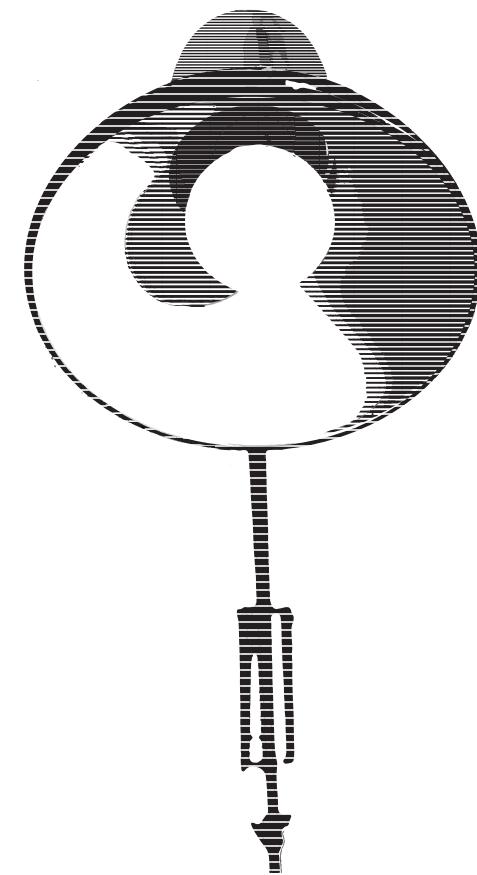

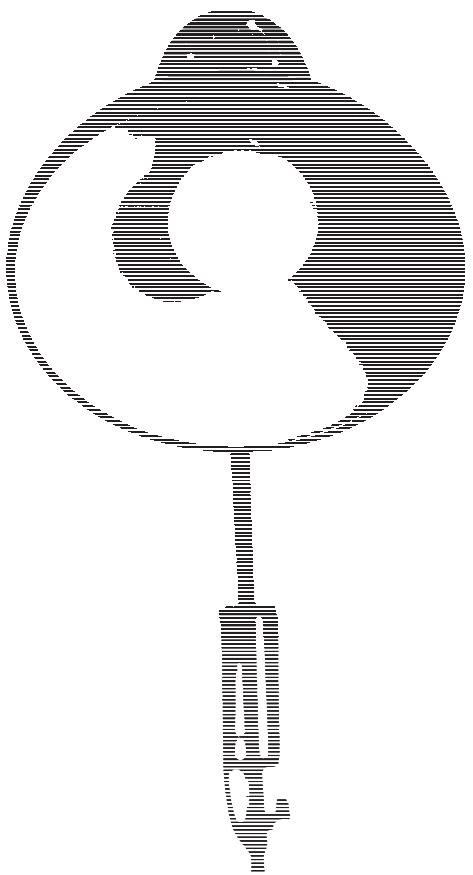

graphic translations

using patterns

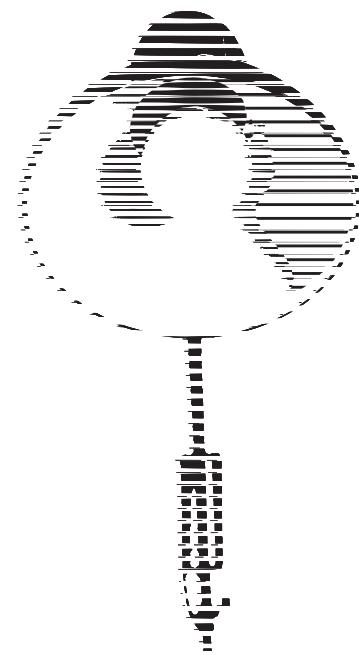

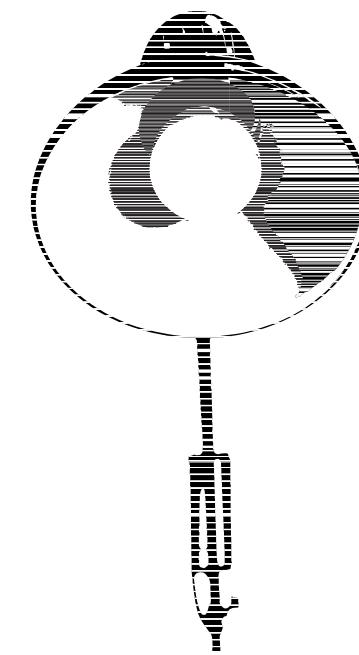

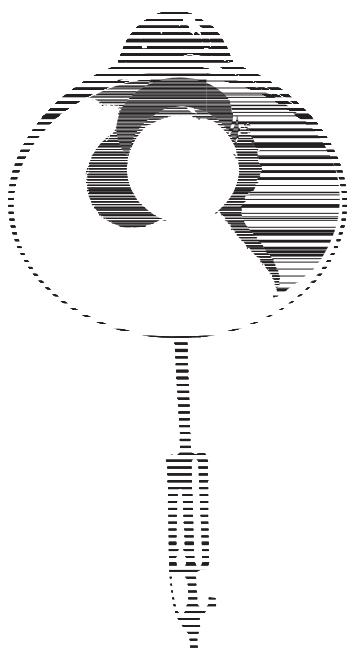

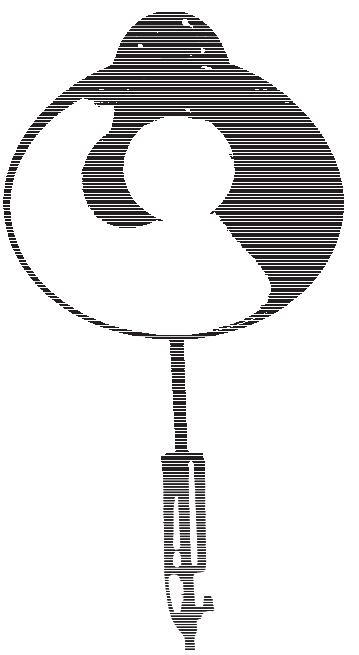

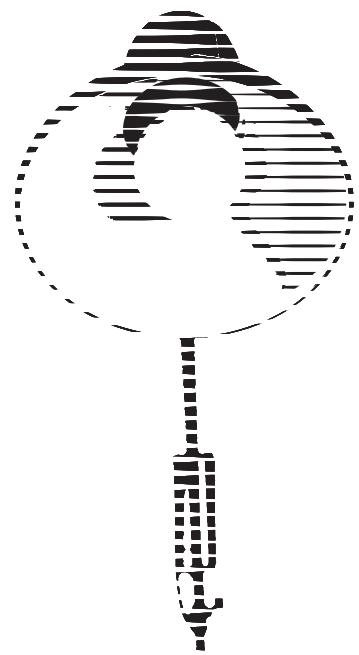

graphic translations

using patterns

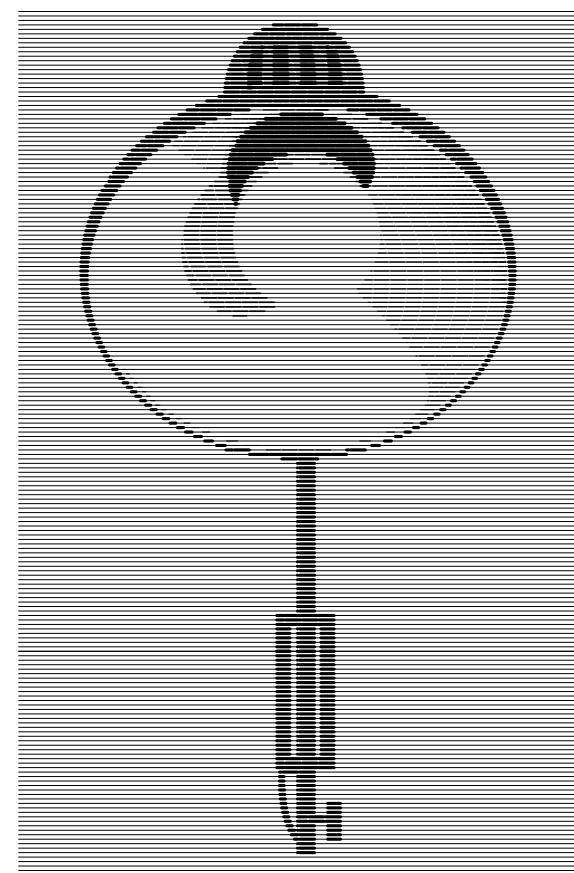

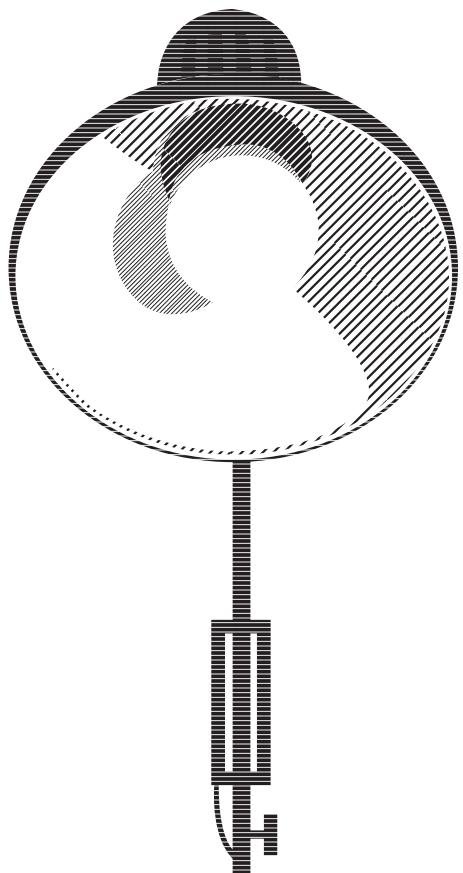

graphic translations

using patterns

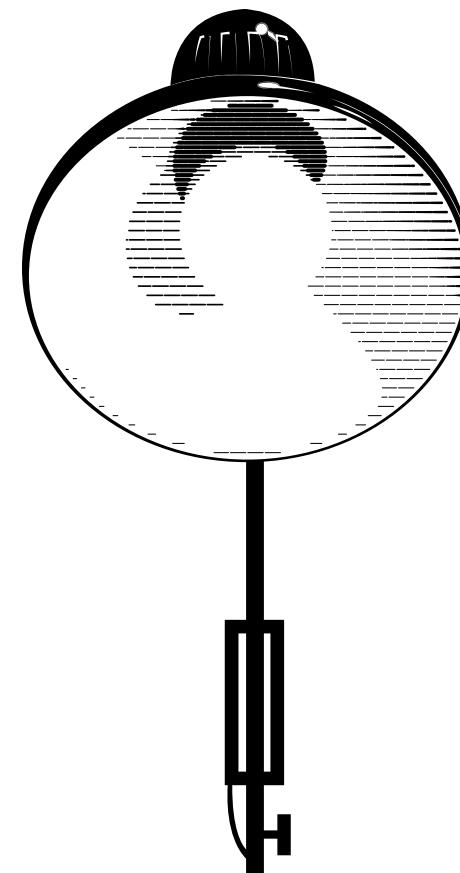

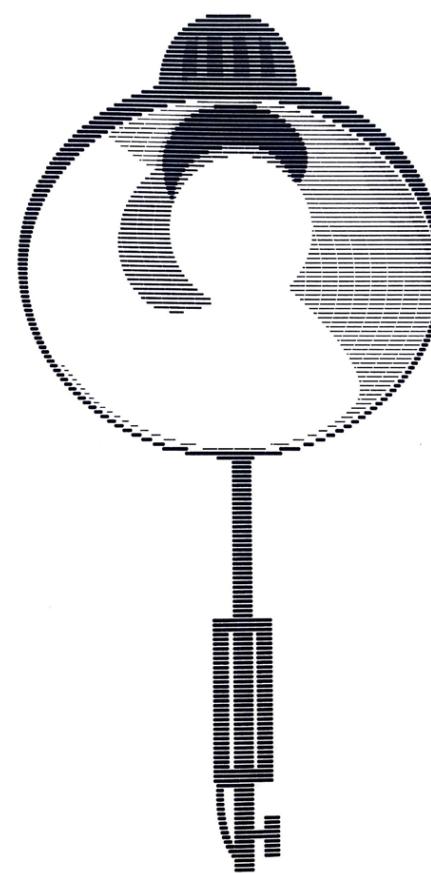

graphic translations

using patterns

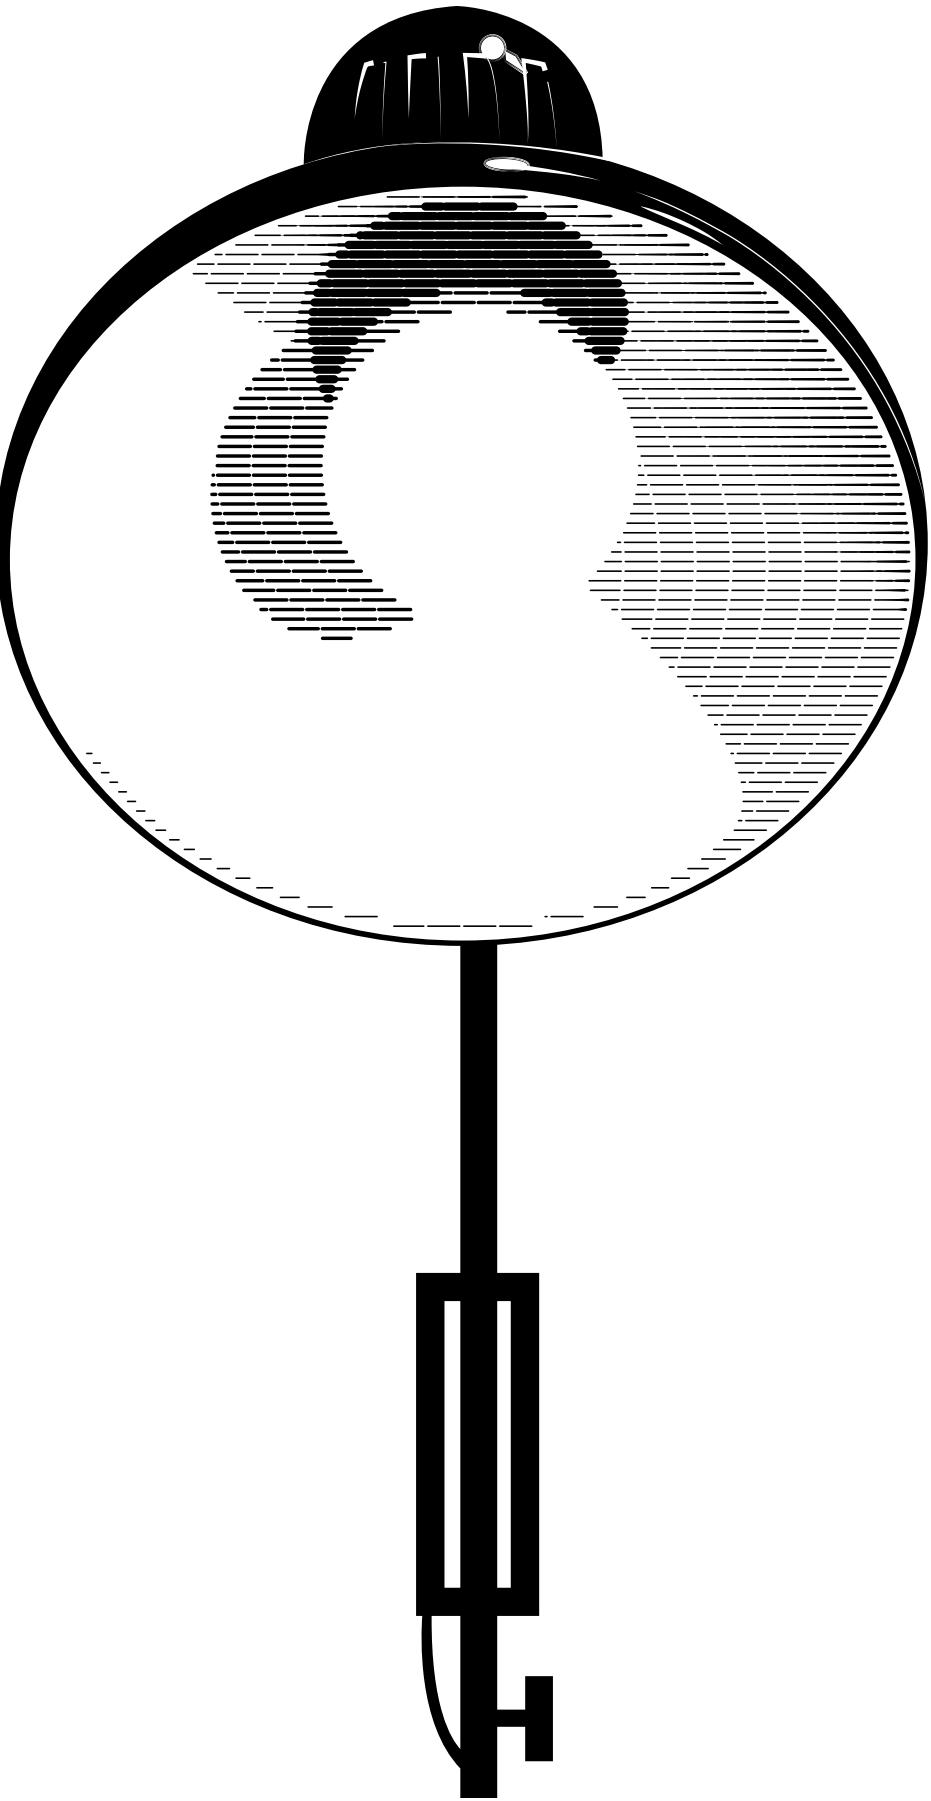

graphic translations

instead of using patterns, these versions use actual linework of varying thicknesses to get different values of gray, and then begining to treat the outer surfaces of the lamp differently than the inside.

this is the final object translation

ad options

using the object translation for an ad, i took inspiration from the form of the lamp and the style of using the lines as shading.

